

Trust Law: The Veiled Architecture

A Trust is not a structure—it's an illusion. It's a legal fiction designed to fragment ownership, obscure inheritance, and reroute divine sovereignty through fiduciary proxies. On paper, it's a three-party agreement: settlor, trustee, beneficiary. In practice, it's a jurisdictional sleight of hand to defraud the entire population.

What They Say:

"A trust protects assets."

"It's a private arrangement."

"It's governed by fiduciary duty."

What They Don't Say:

Trusts are used to redirect divine inheritance into corporate hands and hide assets.

Trustees can impose internal taxes (fees, levies, "resort charges") and stockpile wealth under the guise of stewardship.

Governments now demand transparency, not to protect you—but to monitor sovereignty reclamation.

The Lie of Lawmaking:

A trust cannot "create laws" in the public sense.

But within its domain, a trustee can govern, charge, and enforce—as long as it's framed as administration, mandates, and rules, not legislation.

This is how private jurisdictions masquerade as public compliance.

Within the trust, the trustee can set rules for managing the property—but these are private rules, not public laws. These masquerade as "rules", "laws", "taxes". Meaning any arbitrary "tax" can actually be a masquerading as a public "tax" such as Canadian "luxury tax" where Canadians are charged "taxes" at the gas pump. It should be noted that gas stations such as Petro Canada were fully funded by Canadian taxpayers, and then the gas station moved into a private holding where the Canadian taxpayer then paid for the commodity at private company rates. The Canadian Taxpayer pays to build the company, and the company is then illegally moved into a trust by forging consent from the general public. This means the public company has allegedly been illegally moved into a Trust structure, the taxes are arbitrary and fraudulent, and the said "luxury tax" on fuel is being funneled into a private trust, and not being used for public use in any way shape, or form.

The Metaphysical Truth:

You are the settlor, the trustee, and the beneficiary.

The system split you into three to fracture your power.

Reclaiming your trust means reintegrating your roles, dissolving the veil, and restoring your divine title.
